1. Kullback-Leibler distance-based fusion

The robust fusion by Ajgl and Šimandl [1] may be used to estimate the weights $w_k \in w$ for confidence fusion, when used carefully:

$$w = \arg \max_{\substack{\omega_k: 0 \leq \omega_k \leq 1, \\ \sum_k \omega_k = 1}} -\ln k(\omega), \quad (1)$$

where

$$k(\omega) = \int_{SO(3)} \prod_k (C_k(g))^{\omega_k} dg. \quad (2)$$

The $g \in SO(3)$ defines a rotation on 3D rotation group, $w_k \in w$ is the estimated weight of a segment class k , and $\omega_k \in \omega$ represents the space of all possible weights for a segment class k . This method finds the “best average” between the segment class confidences. However, according to our experience, this one-shot fusion does not assign low values to wrongly detected class confidences, and moreover, its computational complexity rises exponentially with the number of classes. According to our observation, segment classes with smaller segment area tend to be imprecise more often than classes with larger segment area. The matched area of a segment class k directly corresponds to the integral \mathcal{S}_k of the class confidence C_k over all rotations g : $\mathcal{S}_k = \int_{SO(3)} C_k(g) dg$. If the segment class k matches smaller area, \mathcal{S}_k is smaller; if the segment class k matches larger area, \mathcal{S}_k is larger. We use this property to suppress the confidences with lower integral and to reduce computational complexity. We apply iterative pairwise fusion, which provides best results in our application, but in general is suboptimal in terms of Kullback-Leibler divergence [1]. We sort the class confidences C_k according to their integral \mathcal{S}_k starting with the lowest one. We begin the fusion with $C(g)$ being a uniform distribution over all possible rotations, and calculate updated $C(g)$ by fusing it with class confidence C_k one at a time:

$$\forall g \in SO(3) : C(g) = \frac{1}{k(w_k)} C_k(g)^{w_k} C(g)^{1-w_k}, \quad (3)$$

$$k(\omega) = \int_{SO(3)} \frac{1}{k(\omega)} C_k(g)^\omega C(g)^{1-\omega} dg, \quad (4)$$ where the weight w_k for current segment k is calculated as

$$w_k = \arg \min_{\omega} k(\omega). \quad (5)$$

This process is repeated for each class confidence C_k . The impact of class confidence C_k is lower for confidences which are fused earlier, thus reducing the impact of the classes with smaller segment area.

2. GeoPose3K: training, testing, and validation sets

Fig. 1 visualizes the training, validation and testing splits, which we optimized to maximize the distance between the sets and to contain similar distribution of semantic segment classes. Complete definition of our splits can be found in Appendix, Sec. 6.

3. Visual assessment of semantic segmentation training

We provide example images with detected semantic segments to illustrate visual differences between original and fine-tuned models in Fig. 2. We can see that the fine-tuned model Fig. 2(f) generates segmentations much more similar to the synthetic render Fig. 2(b) compared to the initial model Fig. 2(e).

4. Are edges and semantic areas complementary?

In the main article, we show that combination of edges and semantic segments leads to significantly better performance than exclusive use of edges or semantic segments. This is true for the GeoPose3K test set (Fig. 9 in the main paper), and similar results were recorded also for the CH1 dataset (see Fig. 3), and Venturi mountain dataset (see Tab. 1 CF-VCC-2011 vs. VCC-2011 vs. CF).

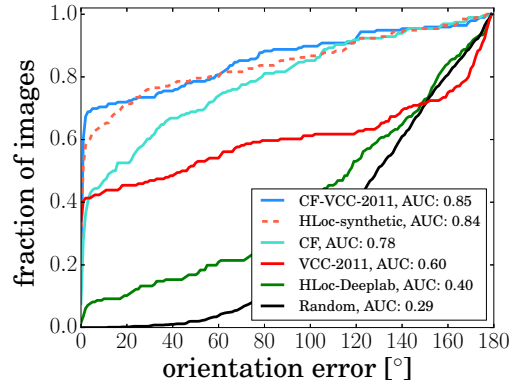

Figure 3. CH1 dataset: Comparison of the edge-based VCC-2011, our CF framework using semantic segments, and combination of both approaches. We use our CF framework to fuse semantic segments and edges together (CF-VCC-2011), which gives the best result.

5. Per frame orientation error on Venturi Mountain Dataset

For Venturi mountain dataset we provide plots for camera orientation error per frame, on both low (Fig. 4) and high (Fig. 5) resolution. We also present results for all discussed variants of our method on Venturi mountain dataset in Tab. 1, including mean and median of the orientation error for each sequence. Complete results on high resolution are also rendered into the attached video.
